The Shoulder rehabilitation vs surgery

The fine balance between conservative treatment and surgery in shoulder pathologies is a topic of interesting discussion today. There are in fact, a number of clinical conditions which we refer to as “borderline”.

An integrated use of patient history, physical examination, and imaging now makes it possible, in light of new studies, to choose the best course of treatment (rehabilitation or surgery) for the patient.

During this conference, Giovanni Di Giacomo, MD will carry out a live surgery demonstrating the steps in the surgical procedure which affect the timing of the recovery process. On that occasion we'll also present a book on shoulder post-surgical rehabilitation" which was written to focus attention on the “cultural overlap” between orthopedic surgeons and rehabilitators which is critically important for proper interdisciplinary communication.
